AUSTRALIA-CHINA YOUTH DIALOGUE

中澳青年对话

THANK YOU

Dear friends of the Australia-China Youth Dialogue,

This report summarises the tenth ACYD held in Shanghai from 20-23 September.

An outstanding and diverse group of 30 Australian and Chinese citizens aged 25-40 were selected to partake in intimate, robust and frank exchange regarding the bilateral relationship. The delegates were distinguished by an identifiable sense of leadership, intellectual energy, and community consciousness. They comprised of diplomats, lawyers, management consultants, engineers, actuaries, health care professionals, university lecturers, and company founders.

Topics discussed at this year's dialogue centred on Technology. Each day was dedicated to deep diving into a particular theme, which were geopolitics, trade and investment, people-to-people exchanges and knowledge collaboration. Further details of each session are set out in this report.

In addition, this year marked the tenth Anniversary of the ACYD and a commemorative book was published titled The First Ten Years. It captures why and how the ACYD was formed, explores stories of just some of the people impacted by the ACYD over the past decade, and looks to future of both the ACYD and more broadly the Australia-China relationship.

The ACYD alumni pool now comprises of 300 past delegates. These individuals are based around the globe and occupy many positions of influence and leadership in their communities. The growth of the ACYD alumni network has achieved a depth, breadth, and scale that can generate a range of unrivalled networking interactions as well as constructive collaboration opportunities.

Never before have Australia and China encountered a time when its opportunity and challenges have been greater in terms of advancing the relationship in a manner that is fundamental to Australia's future in the region, and how China positions itself regionally and globally. The ACYD Board and its Executive Team believe that the talented and highly qualified community of ACYD alumni can enrich, deepen and advance shared Australian and Chinese visions, initiatives and achievements in future years.

The ACYD Board and Executive Team express their deep appreciation for the support of our Partners, Leadership Council, Global Alumni network and friends. With their collective ongoing support, we look forward to planning and delivering the eleventh ACYD in 2020 in Australia and shaping ACYD's future direction into the next decade.

We trust you will enjoy this Summary Report.

ACYD DELEGATE TESTIMONIALS

HONOR MCLENNAN

The ACYD has distinguished itself as the preeminent leadership forum for emerging leaders in Australia-China relations and being selected as a delegate in the 2019 cohort, as ACYD marks ten years, was a privilege. The forum expanded my understanding of the relationship, challenged my perspectives and introduced me to a network of diverse and inspiring delegates (who I now count as friends). I left the ACYD more informed, empowered and ambitious to contribute to the Australia-China relationship now and into the future.

PATRICK INGLE

The ACYD gives young Australian and Chinese leaders a unique opportunity to explore some of the most interesting and challenging themes in our bilateral relationship. Many of the most engaging conversations I had were in coffee breaks or over the dinner table, where the ACYD's intensive nature really comes into its own. I look forward to ACYD's next ten years and its critical role in fostering debate between our countries.

YU TAO

Learning, analysing, and reflecting on the many vitally important issues concerning the future of mankind with a group of the best minds and souls from Australia and Greater China over four days is an experience parallel to none, and joining the wonderful ACYD alumni network is a great privilege with which come great opportunities and responsibilities for the further improvement of the Australia-China relations. The success of the ACYD is vivid evidence that sincere, constructive, and inspiring discussions can be achieved through hard work, dedication, and determination, even in a world which is increasingly influenced by the toxic politics of unilateralism and ultra-nationalism. I would unreservedly recommend the ACYD to all Australian and Chinese young professionals and emerging leaders who believe in the mission of making our world a better place.

PRIME MINISTER

MESSAGE FROM THE PRIME MINISTER

AUSTRALIA-CHINA YOUTH DIALOGUE 2019

Congratulations to all delegates selected to take part in the Australia-China Youth Dialogue during this very special anniversary year.

Over the past decade, the Australia-China Youth Dialogue has brought together 300 exceptional young professionals and emerging leaders to better understand each other's countries and to further the bilateral relationship.

This year in Shanghai, I have no doubt that the Dialogue's theme of Technology will stimulate further fascinating conversation and inspire new possibilities for Australia-China collaboration. This is a wonderful platform to establish lasting friendships and professional networks and I know you will be open-minded and respectful as you seek to find common ground.

Enjoy these four days, sharing your perspectives and celebrating the prosperity generated by the Australia-China relationship so far. Thank you for pursuing this unique opportunity and for your contributions to strengthening the connections between our nations.

WHAT IS THE ACYD?

The ACYD advances the Australia-Greater China relationship by promoting frequent and meaningful dialogue between young leaders from the two regions. ACYD's core objectives are to:

- Develop a community of Australian and Greater Chinese young leaders from a range of backgrounds to create long-term, mutually beneficial relationships;
- Position young influential leaders to be active, visible and constructive figures in Australia and Greater China affairs; and
- Leverage ACYD's community to promote awareness and understanding of culture and society in the public interest.

SITUATION

Australia and China have cultures, languages and thought and value systems that are fundamentally different.

CONTEXT

Australia and China have a relationship that continues to grow in importance, whether in diplomacy, trade, culture, and sport.

RESOLUTION

Invest in talented and committed emerging Australian and Chinese leaders to nurture and develop their understanding and appreciation of the relationship and build an influential and supportive network of thought leaders to work in and with government, corporate and not-for-profit institutions.

ABOUT US

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

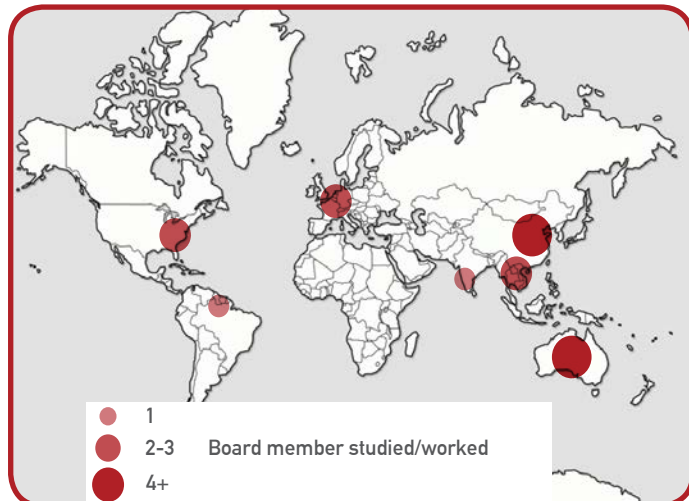

ACYD represents young professionals bridging the Australia-China gap, which is exemplified through the diversity of our Board of Directors' experience studying and working internationally. This year the ACYD farewells Natalie Cope and Henry Makeham and is grateful for all their energy and efforts. The ACYD welcomes Mathew Benjamin and Manelle Issa to the Board and Jade Little will become Chair in 2020.

As Australia and China celebrate 45 years of diplomatic relations, it was inspiring to meet leaders in their respective fields participate in the Australia-China Youth Dialogue. The diversity, energy and dynamism of the delegates and speakers reflect the future of our strong complementary and growing bilateral relationship. thought provoking, relevant and was presented by eminent leaders in their respective fields. The ACYD will stay with all delegates, long into the future, as it fosters connections between like-minded people and that is its greatest legacy.

GLOBAL ALUMNI NETWORK

The ACYD Global Alumni Network consists of more than 300 emerging leaders.

ALUMNI ENGAGEMENT ACTIVITIES FOR 2019

The past ten years has seen the ACYD community grow in strength and size. This included interviewing The Hon. Warwick Smith AO (Inaugural Chair of the National Foundation for Australia-China Relations) as well as a series of alumni from across the years who shared their reflections on their ACYD experience as well as their hopes for the future. The power of the ACYD comes not only from the four day Dialogue itself, but from the ongoing connections, opportunities and knowledge shared between alumni and supporters.

This year many events in Australia and China were held to bring our community together. For instance, we hosted a discussion in Shanghai that streamed live into Perth that explored how technology is shaping society with award winning designer Yiyin Lu. In Melbourne, our community met for an exclusive screening and Q&A of the documentary 'Melbourne City Chinese Flavour' [墨城华韵] which featured three individual stories demonstrating the cultural, education and sporting bonds between multicultural Melbourne and China.

TENTH ANNIVERSARY BOOK

This year the ACYD team embarked on formally recording the organisation's first 10 years of history.

SPOTLIGHT ON ALUMNI 2019

A spotlight on just some of the ACYD Alumni achievements in the last year:

- Of the 40 outstanding Asian-Australians recognised in the 2019 "40 Under 40: Most Influential Asian-Australian Awards", five were ACYD Alumni.
- 2013 delegate Dr. Yijia Li was awarded the 2019 Advance Awards, Asia Impact for his work in stem cell research between Australia and China.
- Labor MP Tim Watts, 2015 delegate, released his first book 'The Golden Country, Australia's Changing Identity'.
- 2010 delegate Dr. Christiana (Xiaoyan) Liang published 'The World We Live In'.
- 2015 delegate Edwina Kwan was promoted to Partner at King & Wood Mallesons, and was featured in The Australian for her role in promoting gender equity in the legal profession.

DAY 1 GEOPOLITICS

Session 1: Is it a trade war or tech war?

Location: King and Wood Mallesons, Shanghai

Session Chair

Yen Tan (ACYD '17) – Regional Director, Trade & Investment (Hong Kong, Macau and South China, Invest Northern Ireland), British Consulate-General in Hong Kong

Speakers

Rosita Dellios, Associate Professor International Relations, Bond University

Simon Lacey, Vice President Global Government Affairs, Huawei

Elizabeth Peak, Minister-Counsellor (Economic), The Australian Embassy in Beijing

John Swinson, Partner, King & Wood Mallesons

This session brought together senior figures from industry, academia and government covering a broad range of perspectives on the US-China trade war. We discussed the rise of “techno-nationalism”, the extent of technological and economic de-coupling between the two global powers, and its implications for Australia and the Asia-Pacific region.

Panelists considered the geopolitical undercurrents of the current trade dispute and highlighted Australia’s ability to play an active role in shaping international norms based on its own interests, which it needs to be more forthright in representing. We explored US-China dynamics, particularly the importance of continuing to look for opportunities for collaboration, differentiating competition from conflict, and identifying the motivating forces behind the methods of Presidents Trump and Xi.

The trade and tech war were described as two sides of a geopolitical coin. The panel noted that assigning blame for the current state of affairs based on binary frameworks, comparing specific but vastly different aspects of US and Chinese society oversimplifies the issues at play. More nuanced approaches are required if we are to see any hope of resolution.

The delegates were left with the profound message that the implication of further economic and technological decoupling is very serious for Australia. As the first session of the dialogue, this panel set the tone for the days to come by highlighting the value of true cultural diplomacy in forums like ACYD for maintaining channels of communication in times of disruption and fostering an enduring relationship between Australia and China.

Session 2: What are the comparative Perspectives of Intellectual Property (IP) from the East and West?

Location: King and Wood Mallesons, Shanghai

Session Chair

David Bennett (ACYD '16) – IP Counsellor at the Australian Embassy

Speakers

Charlotte Trinh, Senior Consultant, Rouse Shanghai

Louisa Xu, IP Manager, Treasury Wine Estates

This session brought together Australia's first Intellectual Property (IP) Counsellor to China, an IP services business focused on emerging markets and one of the world's largest wine companies. The panel discussed the vastly different risk landscapes for IP in Australia and China, particularly with China operating on a first to file system of IP rights. The panel explained that even established foreign brands entering the Chinese market may quickly lose their IP rights if they are not the first to file their brand trademarks and patents. The panel noted that although this has been the case for some time, Australian companies in the Chinese market still present with a lack of competency to protect their brands.

The panel raised the importance of companies, both Australian and Chinese, having staff dedicated to the protection of IP on all platforms and the value of collaborating with tech giants like Tencent's WeChat and Alibaba, which has proved to be highly useful in the identification and prevention of activities like counterfeiting. It was explained that counterfeiting is no longer a clumsy operation in China, with highly sophisticated and deceptive copies emerging on the market, posing greater risk to brands when the growing middle class in China demands authentic products.

The panel shared that this has been met by the emergence of the Alibaba Anti-Counterfeiting Alliance, which supports rated brands with high levels of success on Alibaba by providing assistance in counterfeiting investigations. It is in the interest of platforms like Alibaba to only on-sell genuine products to its customers which has led to it offering assistance to step in and provide data and communications analysis as well as physical raid squads to track down and terminate counterfeiting operations on behalf of its supplier. Great anecdotes of such raids were shared, and the expertise and experience of the exceptional panel was apparent.

With this year's dialogue's focus on technology, the panel looked at some of the other transformative solutions that are assisting in the protection of IP rights in China, showing that China is leaps and bounds ahead when compared with Australia in this field. For example, for the purposes of identifying counterfeiting in supply chains, certain companies have introduced blockchain programs to evidence each stage of the manufacturing process. Other solutions include QR code verification, which Penfolds wine introduced to assure its customers of the genuine nature of its products. To conclude, the panel provided the valuable insight that such innovations come from deep consumer engagement and understanding of the Chinese market, which is often more diverse and opaque than Australian companies are prepared for or willing to engage with.

Gala Dinner

Location: M on the Bund and Glam

Delegates arrived for pre-drinks atop M on the Bund's famous terrace, soaking in a spectacular evening view of Shanghai's iconic Lujiazui skyline. The ACYD 10th anniversary Gala Dinner kicked off shortly afterwards at M Glam, joined by the Australian Consul-General in Shanghai Dominic Trindade and his wife, and founder of M Group Michelle Garnaut AO.

Delegates and guests were treated to a mesmerising panorama of the Bund's night lights as they enjoyed a sensational three-course meal, with Michelle's acclaimed Pavlova as a surprise finish. In her speech, ACYD Executive Director Jade Little highlighted the importance of this historic milestone, showcasing the achievements of the ACYD to date.

Asialink CEO Penny Burt delivered an inspired keynote address showcasing the deep links between Australia and China and the amplitude of opportunity contained within the relationship.

The evening's entertainment also featured a special performance of jazz classics by Tasharni Jameson (ACYD '16) on vocals and Liam Tay Kearney (ACYD '17) on piano. Delegates remained at M on the Bund, sharing stories and laughs well into the night.

DAY 2 TRADE AND INVESTMENT

Session 3: How Australian brands are leveraging Chinese technology?

Location: Rio Tinto, Shanghai

Session Chair

Helen Dai (ACYD '14) – Director of the Office of Deputy CEO (Global Markets and Sector Engagement), Austrade.

Speakers

Bing Liu, Senior Trade Marketing Manager, Austrade

Professor Hean Tat Keh, Professor of Marketing, Monash University

Mark Tanner, Managing Director of China Skinny

This session brought together senior figures from industry, academia and government. The panel unpacked the factors that lead to the success and failure of Australian brands entering the Chinese market. It was established through a number of examples that so far, the success of many Australian brands in China has been accidental rather than sophisticated or targeted with more strategic marketing capability required. The panel shared insights around the nuanced market segmentation that exists in China which makes such marketing so difficult. For example, the panel discussed how the first tier cities alone, such as Beijing, Shanghai, Guangzhou and Shenzhen, all have wildly different priorities, characteristics and social segmentation. Thus Australian companies looking at focusing on first tier cities generally will have already lost if they are not going deeper in their analysis of the emotional and cultural values that will resonate with their consumers.

Where Chinese companies are succeeding by comparison is with nimble, aggressive and assertive small brands targeting these segments. The panel noted that unsurprisingly domestic brands are better with local technology and are more on the pulse, responding to things like WeChat's decline and pick up of new platforms like Tik-Tok, particularly among younger consumers. Chinese brands are also increasingly adopting lean agile start-up style operations, with the capability to take a product like a face mask from ideation to market in 3 months or less, while a foreign company might spend 3 years working on a shampoo strategy which is obsolete in China by the time it reaches the consumer.

Looking further at the Chinese market for Australian products, the panel spoke about the rising middle class in China which is travelling more, which in turn is increasing the Chinese exposure to and desire for foreign products. The panel spoke of examples such as Tasmania's Bridestowe Lavender Farm's 'Bobbie the Bear' (a lavender filled bear, the authentic original available only in Tasmania) which took China by storm as Chinese social media influencer sharing of the purple soft toy went viral. Another fascinating insight was value of brands tapping into notions of Chinese nationalism and deep cultural drivers such as the ability to change one's own destiny with certain products.

Overall, the panel had the delegates on the edge of their seats with the possibility, complexity, and immensity of the Chinese market and the incredible opportunities and real challenges that exist for Australian companies utilising Chinese technology.

Session 4: How technology has supercharged productivity in China

Location: Rio Tinto, Shanghai

Session Chair

Michael Su (ACYD '17) – Senior Strategy Manager, Tencent

Speakers

Matthew Brennan, Managing Director, China Channel and tech commentator

Eva Xiao, China and Mongolia Correspondent, AFP

Robin Zhang, China CEO, Canva

This session led us on a journey from e-commerce and industrial robots to regulation, privacy and data mining. Panellists highlighted the fact that e-commerce is evolving rapidly and having a marked effect on all businesses in China – leading to innovation arbitrage opportunities in other countries.

They emphasised that China is only “big” in parts, with technological activity concentrated in developed areas. Possibilities in underdeveloped areas, lower tier cities and rural geographies are enormous. In China, there remains ample opportunity for technology to improve the productivity of inefficient back-end processes. Moreover, China is becoming a frontier for experimental projects requiring big data mining and artificial intelligence, including in testing of autonomous vehicles. Valuable lessons can be extrapolated from Chinese data.

Turning supermarkets into experience fulfilment centres, and reversing the traditional approach of the recruiting industry (i.e. seekers searching for jobs) were highlighted as case studies for model innovation, and this was contrasted with technical innovation. Data privacy was also discussed at length, and panellists emphasised the need for effective, balanced regulation, especially regarding facial recognition and location tracking.

Session 5: What does the Digital Silk Road mean?

Location: Rio Tinto, Shanghai

Session Chair

Mathew Benjamin (ACYD '18) – Founder, AsiaRecon

Speakers

John W.H. Denton AO, Secretary General, International Chamber of Commerce (ICC)

This year delegates were privileged to hear from John W.H. Denton AO, the newly appointed Secretary General of the International Chamber of Commerce (ICC). One of the key messages that came out of this session was that global institutions have not reorganised themselves to accommodate for new realities, including the biggest geopolitical shift in the last 20 to 30 years, the emergence of China. John spoke passionately about the opportunity to transform the ICC to make it more relevant in the 21st century, including to support the establishment of new principles for the digital economy.

This session provided delegates the unique opportunity to hear both global and bilateral perspectives on Australia-China affairs. Delegates asked questions surrounding how, and by what standards, a belt and road initiative (BRI) would enable new forms of commerce in the new digital economy. This led to discussions about how new internet standards and laws from China are affecting the norms and standards of globalisation and harmonisation of open trade and investment globally. This pushed the conversation to acknowledge security concerns that come with this, including how Australia and China could better balance security and business interests. Discussions also delved into narratives that had been forming out of the broader US-China trade war, including references to “decoupling” of critical economic and technological infrastructure.

Session 6: Tech in Action

Location: Ctrip Headquarters, Shanghai

Session Chair

Cindy Gottinger (ACYD '13) – Product Market Lead, Google

Speakers

Wendy Min, Senior International Affairs PR Manager, Ctrip

Ting Zhou, Marketing Manager, Ctrip

The delegation ventured out to Hongqiao airport to visit the headquarters of Ctrip, one of China's largest Online Travel Agency. Wendy Min provided a fascinating overview of Ctrip group's strategy and vision. Continuing the themes emerging from panel sessions earlier that day, Wendy noted the fierce competition and constant pressure Ctrip faces in the Chinese market, and that one cannot market itself to China as just 'one country'. In order to succeed in this market, companies need to put customer service at the core of their strategy.

We also reflected on Ctrip's company mission, to bring about world peace through travel. Chinese consumers are curious and enjoy trying to unique experiences that allow them to learn about the local culture and history. This curiosity fosters understanding and compassion which is key to furthering their mission.

We also had the opportunity to tour Ctrip headquarters and learn about the company culture. During the tour we had a sneak peek into their data control room where we saw first hand how ctrip uses technology to deliver 24/7 customer service.

DAY 3 PEOPLE-TO-PEOPLE EXCHANGES

Session 7: Social media, the internet and new technologies - how are these leveraged in different cultures?

Location: Lendlease, Shanghai

Facilitated by ACYD Communications Manager, Manelle Issa, delegates discussed social media, the internet and new technologies. Breaking out into groups, the discussions were guided and mentored by ACYD alumni from previous years. The groups then presented back their findings, with some using creative mediums to effectively deliver their message.

The 'Splinternet', a characterization of the Internet as splintering and dividing due to various factors such as geography, politics or technology, was identified as potential barrier for Australia-China engagement. Government regulations and protectionism was identified as prevalent across both the Chinese and Australian (or 'western') internet ecosystems. Both systems promote technology champions, have national policies for using and collecting data, and censor different content.

Social norms and adaptations of social media platforms and how, when and why these platforms are used was also identified as an area of potential difficulty, especially for professionals working between clients or colleagues in both Australia and China. For example, a cross-border lawyer may respond to a client via WeChat, as the client is comfortable using the platform for both social and professional purposes, expects a quicker response time, and seeks to build a relationship. The Australian law-firms, however, who are billing the Chinese client may then require all the decisions or questions to be resent formally via email. This therefore creates additional work and confusion for the lawyer working between the two online and workplace cultures.

The division of digital worlds was also apparent in structural systems such as banking and business. The traditional banking system, such as the one used in Australia, has developed and matured over hundreds of years. This established infrastructure is accustomed for Australian consumers and businesses. The modern Chinese banking system by comparison is relatively new, and therefore the system more readily embraces technological advancements. Chinese users are adapting to new technology, and modern banking platforms, such as WeChat and AliPay, and this use is pervasive across age groups and demographics in China. Australian businesses therefore stand to gain valuable customer engagement by adapting to new banking and e-commerce systems.

While social media technologies have been developed to connect people across the globe, the potential siloing of social media platforms and communities was cautioned by many of the delegates. It was suggested that the antidote to the Splinternet is to promote consumption of digital content on both Australian and Chinese platforms, and find commonalities in the human stories and values posted online.

Session 8: What are the joys and challenges of life abroad?

Location: CiCi's Dumplings, Shanghai

To begin this session, the delegates enjoyed bonding over the challenge of making their lunch together as they learnt how to make Shanghai's most famous soup-filled dumpling, xiaolong bao. After a shared meal at the cooking school, the microphone was passed around the two long tables to give the delegates an opportunity to share their experiences of 'The joys and challenges of life abroad'.

A number of our Chinese delegates had studied and worked in Australia and then repatriated to China. While many of our Australian delegates had worked abroad and then returned home, only to find their overseas experience sometimes more burdensome than beneficial when it came to finding suitable work. The personal anecdotes and insights ranged from experiences of confusing corporate culture to campus cliques and general attitudes to the value of working abroad.

Although this was one of the dialogue's most informal sessions, it was one of the most powerful as delegates tapped into the highs and lows of their careers and their lives. The session also demonstrated the invaluable cross-cultural connections and friendships that ACYD facilitates as the delegates came to understand each other's perspectives better in an intimate setting.

Session 9: Commemorating 10 Years of ACYD making P2P connections

Location: Lendlease, Shanghai

This year is the tenth anniversary of the Australia China Youth Dialogue. To mark the occasion The ACYD launched an anniversary book called: “十年 – The First Ten Years”, a publication celebrating the achievements in fostering people to people exchange and mutual understanding over the last decade.

During the launch we heard from Elizabeth Tang about how the book was created and also special guests Warwick Smith AM (Chair of The National Foundation for Australia-China Relations) via video and Professor Pookong Kee (BHP Chair of Australian Studies at Peking University). We also enjoyed readings of extracts from the book from Ted Zhou and Manelle Issa. It was a memorable occasion to have 2019 delegates, alumni and partners in attendance.

Alumni Celebration Dinner

Location: The Australian Consul-General's Residence, Shanghai

With the ACYD now into its 10th year, the ACYD network continues to grow and strengthen. On the evening of Day Three, the ACYD Delegates were introduced to this network at the 2019 ACYD Alumni Dinner, generously hosted at the Australia-Consult-General's Residence in Shanghai.

The evening opened with a powerful Kung-fu performance in the front lawn followed by a warm welcome by the Australian Consul-General, Dominic Trindade. The Consul-General described the history of the residence and also spoke to the power of this unique ACYD community.

Inside guests were privileged to hear, on the ACYD's 10th Anniversary, from the Founder, Henry Makeham. Henry talked to the history of the ACYD, which included sharing funny stories and also asking a two alumni – Peter Cai (2010) and Mark Chan (2014) – to elaborate on how the ACYD has impacted their lives. Having spent the past few years in the US, Henry also touched on his observations from that part of the region relating to Australia-China affairs.

In true ACYD Alumni Dinner style, the night was filled with various challenges that had each table competing again the other. The 75 guests were involved in competitive games using WeChat functions that brought about much bonding and many laughs.

The evening concluded in true ACYD style, with alumni, Delegates and guests joining in chorus at KTV.

DAY 4 KNOWLEDGE COLLABORATION

Session 10: What is the Future of Chinese and Australian collaboration in science and technology?

Location: XNode, Shanghai

Session Chair

Matthew Baker (ACYD '15) – Scientia Research Fellow, UNSW

Speakers

Dr. Guangxi Dong, Head of Membranes, Materials & Manufacturing Development (M3DU)

Lydia Lopes, Manager Global Strategy, CSIRO

Dane Richmond, Technology and Investment Lead, Austrade

This session introduced delegates to the complex dynamic that exist when our economic and security interests overlap. Panelists and delegates raised concerns surrounding the lack of guidelines that defines and differentiates scientific collaborations between Australia and China with programs that might be classified as sensitive and fall under Australia's Defence Export Controls. These controls appear to be applied arbitrarily without much engagement with the Australian research community. The opportunity here is to create clearer guidelines to enable continued collaborations between Australia and China across the areas of science and technology.

Overall the sentiment was that the cold war mentality appears to have set in, and made it very difficult to establish areas of mutual cooperation in areas such as robotics, quantum computing and artificial intelligence. Operating in a global marketplace we discussed the need for reciprocity. Concerns were raised with China's new data sovereignty laws becoming restrictive for new cross border innovations across emerging areas related to data. It has become increasingly difficult to identify areas of mutual cooperation in emerging technologies that do not have dual-use applications.

With all the concerns raised from both sides delegates were surprised and inspired to learn that the Australian Commonwealth Scientific and Industrial Research Organisation (CSIRO) has now been working with China for 40 years. Their longest-standing partner in that time has been the Chinese Academy of Sciences (CAS), who first visited CSIRO in 1975. The deep research collaborations do exist in areas that are less known by the general public in areas that span agriculture, water, advanced manufacturing, mining and metals.

Session 11: Where do Tech and Art meet?

Location: XNode, Shanghai

Session Chair

Tasharni Jamieson (ACYD '16) – Global Founders Program Manager, UNSW

Speakers

Benjamin Bacon, Co-Founder, Dogma Labs

Bin Dixon Ward, Sessional Lecturer, RMIT

Vivian Xu, Co-Founder, Dogma Labs

Throughout history, the art world has repeatedly experienced the disruption of old mediums, and the adaptation of new artistic technologies. But ultimately, these disruptions and technologies have stood for the advancement of art. In the social media era, the collision of art and technology has been empowering the artist and audience alike in China and Australia. Artists can expose their work to a global audience by simply clicking 'share' on any chosen social media platform, and the playing field has been leveled so artistic success is possible for anyone with a smartphone in their grasp.

Our panel of art and design experts discussed the changing landscape of art in both China and Australia, and how traditional craft combined with modern mediums have shaped their works. China has seen a modern surge in its attitude towards design, and in particular design education, and is placing an emphasis on modern design technique. And while the panelists identified that the perception of craft and the craftsman has been altered by use of modern medium and techniques, ultimately the relationship to art remains the same.

Delegates and panelists alike were then invited to explore the topic further through a Soft Shoe Shuffle exercise. Prompted by leading questions, delegates were asked to identify their views on art and technology, automation and creativity, craft and production, and the ever-changing role of art in daily life, politics and cultural identity.

Closing

ACYD concluded with Executive-Director, Jade Little thanking the delegates for their consistent engagement and participation during the course of the four-day dialogue as well as Management Team for their efforts in leading up to and during the series of events.

ACYD's Management Team volunteers their time to bring this unique forum to life each year and it was important to acknowledge its members. The delegates then returned to the hotel for some final group photos, to exchange WeChat and contact details and make plans for future catch ups – the delegates staying on for work and travel in Shanghai didn't part ways there but went on for another meal together of their own organisation! It was brilliant to see ACYD's newest alumni buzzing with enthusiasm for future activities together less than minutes after the dialogue for 2019 had come to a close.

ACYD DELEGATES

JOSHUA ARMSTRONG

Joshua Armstrong is a Research Assistant to The Hon John Howard OM AC, the former Prime Minister of Australia between 1996 and 2007. Prior to his current role, he was a Maritime Warfare Officer in the Royal Australian Navy for nearly six years. He holds a Master's degree in Strategic studies from the Australian National University and is currently studying a Diploma of Languages (Chinese) at the University of Sydney. Last December Joshua attended the Australia-China High-Level Dialogue, a 1.5 track leadership dialogue, with Mr. Howard in Beijing. Earlier in the year he was the Liberal Party campaign manager for the division of Kogarah, the seat with the highest proportion of Australians with a Chinese background. Being involved in the Australia-China relationship at both the local and national level, he is deeply committed to the people-to-people links between the two nations. More broadly, understanding the challenges for the relationship from both the strategic and political perspectives, he is supportive of continuing engagement by finding new areas of cooperation.

BRODIE BURNS-WILLIAMSON

Brodie Burns-Williamson is a Senior Research and Public Affairs Officer at the Australian Consulate-General in Chengdu, China. Brodie uses his Mandarin language skills to build economic and cultural links between Australia and southwest China. Over the last four years, Brodie has assisted high tech Australian start-ups like Cozitrip land in southwest China, overseen two advertising campaigns that reached more than one million people and helped expand the Australian Studies Centre network in China to Sichuan Normal University, among other projects. Along the way, he has conducted research, produced two books and co-founded southwest China's first Australian alumni network. Brodie holds a Master of International Laws from Zhongnan University of Economics and Laws, Wuhan, and a Law/Asian Studies double degree from La Trobe University, Melbourne.

Yifan is a strong advocate for gender equality and cultural diversity. Seeing herself as the beneficiary of international education, she aspires to support more female students to develop their skills and raise their voice. This motivated her to co-found the ACYA Women's Network, a launching pad for women to grow, lead and empower each other. Her exchange experience has further strengthened her cross-cultural communication.

SESSION CHAIRS

MATT BAKER 2015 Delegate

Dr Matt Baker is a Lecturer in the School of Biotechnology and Biomolecular Sciences and an Affiliated Researcher at the EMBL Australia Node for Single Molecule Science at the University of New South Wales.

Matt completed his DPhil at Oxford University as a John Monash Scholar studying the bacterial flagellar motor that makes nearly all bacteria swim. Subsequently Matt investigated protein transport, in particular the bacterial twin arginine transporter (TAT) using cell imaging and artificial bilayer systems. Matt recently demonstrated the novel domain-swap mechanism for rotor assembly (NSMB 2016), and he has focussed primarily on how simple subunit interactions govern assembly of complex architectures, including the filament (eLife 2017). The next question is how this complexity emerged. To begin addressing this, Matt's nascent group at UNSW looks at how ion selectivity changes using directed evolution to examine the evolutionary landscape that constrains the adaptation of the motor.

DAVID BENNETT 2016 Delegate

David Bennett is IP Australia's first Intellectual Property Counsellor to China, based at the Australian Embassy, Beijing. He helps Australians to protect their intellectual property in China, in particular by providing information and guidance on the realities of IP registration and enforcement, which often differ from people's expectations. He also supports the Australian government's engagement with China on IP matters.

David has worked in IP Australia's international, domestic, and trade policy sections, as well as in the private sector. He is a registered Trade Marks Attorney and former biotechnology patent examiner, with a technical background in molecular biology. He has worked and studied in the USA, Japan, Australia and China, and he participated in the Australia-China Youth Dialogue in 2016. David enjoys exploring Beijing, particularly the hutongs and the growing craft beer scene.

Michael is a senior strategy manager at Tencent, responsible for devising and executing strategic initiatives for Tencent's Online Media business group, including, but not limited to, content and IP strategy, product strategy and internationalisation. Prior to joining Tencent, Michael was a Project Director at Pingan backed real estate services platform start-up Haofang, based in Shanghai, where he leads the Rental Properties BU and the Overseas Properties BU.

Michael was born in Beijing and later immigrated to Australia where he completed his studies and joined global management consulting firm McKinsey & Company, during which he travelled extensively across Asia, Europe and Africa, and worked across a whole range of industries ranging from traditional manufacturing and resources, to TMT and high-tech.

Having experienced first hand the social, economic and technological forces which have transformed China over the past few decades, Michael is passionate about how China will contribute to the region and to the world.

ELVA ZHANG 2014 Delegate

Formally an international student from China, Elva is an Australian-qualified lawyer with a Master of Laws (LLM in International Economic Law) from Geneva, Switzerland. With a demonstrated history of working in the maritime industry and international trade, she is highly skilled in dealing with cross-border transactions and international dispute resolution especially international commercial arbitration. Fluent in English and a native Mandarin Chinese speaker, Elva has developed a specialty in China related matters. Elva thrives in multinational business environment and global legal context, in which she can synthesise her trained legal knowledge, strong commercial acumen, innate cultural intelligence and positive leadership to make a meaningful contribution to the growth of the business she is working for.

In addition to working as a lawyer, Elva is the Founder of Peace Lab, which curates and conducts experiential workshops that synthesis ancient Eastern wisdom teachings and contemporary Western science theories as an agent for well-being.

YEN TAN 2017 Delegate

Born and raised in Hong Kong, Yen developed strong ties to Australia whilst travelling around the country on a working holiday visa at the age of 20. She went back to Hong Kong to finish university and later joined Morgan Stanley, helping clients raise capital via overseas listings and mergers.

Yen migrated to Sydney in 2012 and later became an Executive Director at Goldman Sachs Australia. She provides business intelligence on financial services, consumer retail, technology and natural resources as well as contributing to some of the largest cross-border mandates. With her broad set of skills, cultural sensitivity and exposure to different markets, she wanted to promote Australia-China economic and cultural exchange via the Australia-China Youth Dialogue (ACYD).

Following the growing opportunities in Asia, Yen has recently returned to Hong Kong as Regional Director, Trade & Investment at the British Consulate-General in Hong Kong. In her new role, she is responsible for developing market strategy and partnerships to secure trade and investment in the region.

LIAM TAY KEARNEY 2016 Delegate

Liam is a macroeconomics research student at the University of Western Australia under the Bachelor of Philosophy (Honours) programme, specialising in foreign direct investment.

Liam was previously the New Colombo Plan China Fellow (2017) and Westpac Bicentennial Foundation Asian Exchange Scholar (2018) – and completed placements at the Australian Embassy, Beijing, and United Nations Capital Development Fund in Yangon, Myanmar.

Liam curated the Australia-China Emerging Leaders Summit (ACELS) in Beijing (2018) and Shanghai (2019) and served as China Manager of the Australia-China Youth Association in 2018. Liam lived in China for three years with stints in Beijing, Shanghai and Hangzhou and comes from a Singapore-Irish background.

WILLIAM ZHAO 2016 Delegate

William Zhao is a Transactional Risk professional with the Private Equity and Mergers & Acquisitions Services team of Marsh, a subsidiary of Marsh & McLennan Companies (NYSE: MMC). Prior to joining Marsh, William worked as a M&A Analyst at Yatsen Associates, a boutique corporate advisory firm focused on cross-border M&A transactions between Australia and China.

William's passion for Sino-Australian relations was fostered through his work at Australia China Business Council, China Australia Millennial Project, University of Sydney's China Studies Centre, and through his leadership roles at ACYA national board and ACYPI Sydney chapter.

William holds a Master's degree in Banking from University of Sydney, where he served on Chancellor's Committee and was elected as National Vice-President of Council of International Students Australia.

William had also completed international exchange programs at University of Nottingham in UK and State University of New York in US.
